The seminar explores race and racism from a spatial perspective and pays particular attention to social justice concerns, whether this latter category includes theoretical work, political mobilization, and/or everyday resistance and refusal. We frame our approach to these issues initially in terms of spatial and racial theory, drawing from the literatures of geography, urban studies, Critical Race Theory, and Ethnic Studies. Specifically, we examine space with respect to the geography and urban studies literature on the production of urban space and spatial scale. Next we investigate different theories of race, including those of Stuart Hall, W.E.B. Du Bois, Michael Omi and Howard Winant, and Evelyn Nakano Glenn. These theories incorporate critiques of capitalism and colonialism and analyses of past and present political economic restructuring with their understanding of race and racism. Together these spatial and racial theories will frame the remaining weeks' readings for this course, which focus on a different scale (body, community, city, region, nation, and beyond) each week to explore the mutual construction of race and space. Our task will be to tease out the interconnections between race and space and between spatial scales. Finally, our readings will consider different sites where race and space are intermeshed, such as the prison-industrial complex, the globalizing neoliberal city, and the world of 1970s leftists of color. You will leave the seminar with a greater understanding of race, space, power, and resistance from a social science perspective.

Format

This is a four-unit, discussion-based, highly reading-intensive seminar. The seminar is cross-listed between Asian American Studies, American Studies, and City and Regional Planning.

Required Texts

1. Nayan Shah, Contagious Divides, (University of California Press, 2001)

2. Claire Jean Kim, Bitter Fruit: The Politics of Black-Korean Conflict in New York City, (Yale University Press, 2000)
3. Laura Pulido, Black, Brown, Yellow, and Left: Radical Activism in Los Angeles, (University of California Press, 2006)
4. Katharyne Mitchell, Crossing The Neoliberal Line: Pacific Rim Migration and the Metropolis, (Temple University Press, 2004)
5. Ruth Wilson Gilmore, Golden Gulag: Prisons, Surplus, Crisis, and Opposition in Globalizing California, (University of California Press, 2007)
6. Peter Linebaugh and Marcus Rediker, The Many Headed Hydra: The Hidden History of the Revolutionary Atlantic, (Beacon Press, 2002)
7. Charlotte Brooks, Alien Neighbors and Foreign Friends: Asian Americans, Housing, and the Transformation of Urban California, (University of Chicago Press, 2009)

The assigned texts can be bought at the Cornell Store and will be found stocked in the City and Regional Planning textbook section.

Where noted, several of the assigned articles can be downloaded from the Cornell University Library website. Please see me if you do not know how to download articles from online databases.

The remaining readings will be posted to the course Blackboard site. You will have to register on the Blackboard site to access the articles.

Although there are supplemental readings listed throughout the syllabus, these readings are not required for seminar. I have provided the titles for those of you want to follow up on a particular topic. In some cases the supplemental readings provide theoretical background for the assigned readings, but in other cases the readings provide additional case studies or arguments for you to consider.

Course requirements

Your grade will be based on each of the following areas:

Participation: Students are required to attend and participate in seminar. Participation is an important part of the course experience, providing the opportunity to critically evaluate course materials, debate, and share ideas. Participation will be graded based on a student's active and critical engagement. It is imperative that each student complete the weekly readings to be able to participate effectively and fully. To facilitate discussion each student will be required to submit a set of discussion questions and/or comments and post them to the course Blackboard site no later than midnight the day before seminar session.

Response papers: Students must submit 2-3 page response papers (double-spaced, 12 point font) throughout the semester on the readings. These will provide an opportunity to write lengthier reflections on the readings, e.g. what you liked or disliked about the argument, how the reading related to other readings in this course, or what points needed clarification. Please note that graduate students will be expected to write lengthier and more substantive responses. In total you are responsible for five papers. This means that you can pick and choose which readings are more compelling for you to write on. Please submit the responses (hard copy) at the end of Tuesday's seminar for the week after the reading was completed. Post them to the course Blackboard site as well. I will not accept late responses. I also strongly suggest that you not wait until the end of the semester to turn in your five.

Short presentation: Groups of two to three students will be expected to help lead weekly discussion. Presentations will begin with a short discussion of key points and a very brief summary of the arguments in the readings. The small groups should collect the submitted discussion questions from all seminar participants and use these for the basis of structuring the remainder of discussion. As this is a small class, students will have to present more than once. You will have the option of choosing the week on which you present. The presenting group is responsible for readings assigned for the full week.

Term paper: Students will submit a 10-15 page term paper at the end of the semester, which will focus on a topic related to the themes of this course. Graduate students will be expected to submit longer and more polished papers. Please submit a detailed 3-page prospectus of your paper topic in Week 6 of the seminar after consultation with the course instructor. The final draft of the term paper must be submitted on Thursday, December 10, 2009. NO LATE PAPERS WILL BE ACCEPTED.

Participation	25%
Small group presentation	10%
Response Papers	30%
Prospectus	5%
Term Paper	30%

I do encourage you all to come see me at some point during the semester for my office hours. It helps me get to know you.

Course Rules and "Etiquette"

I welcome you to this course and hope to make it an informative, productive, and engaging experience for all. There are a few classroom rules to abide by.

Please be prompt and attend seminar on time. It is very disruptive for students to walk into class late.

While I recognize that the use of cell phones and laptop computers with wireless access are an indispensable part of life on and off campus, I ask that you refrain from text messaging, using email, or surfing the Web while in class. Such activities do not facilitate an optimal learning environment for fellow students and can, in many instances, constitute rude behavior.

Each student in this course is expected to abide by the Cornell University Code of Academic Integrity, see < <http://cuinfo.cornell.edu/Academic/AIC.html>>. Any work submitted by a student in this course for academic credit will be the student's own work. For this course, collaboration is allowed for group presentations, but your written response papers and research paper must be your own work. If you paraphrase or quote from another source, then you must cite it properly. Any form of plagiarism on any of the assignments will result in a failing grade for the course.

In compliance with the Cornell University policy and equal access laws, I am available to discuss appropriate academic accommodations that may be required for students with disabilities. Requests for academic accommodations are to be made during the first three weeks of the semester, except for unusual circumstances, so arrangements can be made.

For a definition of what constitutes plagiarism, please refer to the following website: <http://plagiarism.arts.cornell.edu/tutorial/index.cfm>.
